IMPACT OF HARSH WEATHER CONDITIONS MISSING SCHOOL IS ALL FUN AND GAMES UNTIL SCHOOL'S EXTENDED TO THE END OF JUNE

Excitement filled the students' bodies as they woke up with a notification on their phone saying that school was canceled. That was until i happened over and over, and became excessive. In all, due to the harsh weather conditions, school was canceled a total of nine days, plus another day due to a power outage. With the students being at school so infrequently because of the snow and ice, lesson plans and schedules of what needed to be covered had fallen far behind, which sprouted some frustration for teachers. "It affected my lesson plans because I wasn't able to do a lot of activities and had to lecture all the way through," said IB Biology teacher, Mr. Robert Winters.

While the teachers seemed to be frustrated even from the beginning, students initially enjoyed their time outside in the snow without any thoughts of school in their brains. Hannah Price (10) said, "I enjoyed the days off because I got to sleep in and play in the snow the whole time!"

But, eventually, after so many days of snow and ice, even the students were bored of being stuck inside their houses with nothing to do and nowhere to go.

"At first it was fun, but it got annoving after a while because I was just stuck at home," said Deandre Clarke (10). Many kids were excited about missing school until they were told that every day missed after two had to be made up. "In the long term I don't think cutting into the summer is worth missing school over a few inches of snow," said Crystal Berg (10), In mid-March, the decision was finally announced that the school district would extend the school year by five extra days in June something seniors wouldn't have to worry about.

Magdalena Ramirez (12) said, "It's a good

THE AFTERMATH: After school gets let out, Jorge Rincon-Orozco (11) walks out into the snow to find his bus. Students' return to school included traversing snowy sidewalks and slushy roads. Many students also heard exasperated "We are very behind' statements from teachers. Orozco sale "They handled the situation a lot better compared to the previous year."
